Jon Yorke

Professor Jon Yorke is the Academic Registrar and Associate Deputy Vice-Chancellor (Learning and Teaching) at Curtin University. Prior to taking up the role of Registrar in 2016 he was located within Curtin Learning & Teaching initially as the Manager, Assessment and then later as the Director, Assessment and Quality Learning. His research interests and publications span policies and practices within the domains of assessment, learning and teaching in higher education, with a particular focus on academic integrity. Jon moved to Australia in 2008, joining Curtin from the University of Plymouth (UK), where he was the Program Director for academic development programs for new and experienced staff.

Julia Copeland

After working in Musical Theatre, Event Management and Mining, Julia joined the Higher Education sector in 2003. Moving back to Perth from Sydney in 2005 she joined ECU as their Domestic Admissions Manager before moving to Curtin two years later as the Manager of Student Services for the Faculty of Science and Engineering, a post she held for eight years. Following a two-year break outside the sector she commenced a role at Murdoch University in 2017 which included responsibility for the administration of student discipline cases. Contract cheating is significantly harder to prove than most other offences and this has peaked her interest in how these are, or can be, investigated.

Kate Rodgers

Kate has managed Educational Technology systems for 17 years in Higher Education and the commercial Ed-Tech sector, where she led customer experience for a global text-matching system vendor.

In recent years, she has driven capacity-building initiatives around Academic Integrity and text-matching systems, particularly fostering Academic and Marker skills in interpreting originality reports and identifying contemporary cheating behaviours. Furthermore, she has led and advocated improvements from text-matching software vendors, to deliver better functionality for administrative and academic users of these systems.

Kate is currently a Senior Educational Technologist in the Centre for Learning and Teaching at Edith Cowan University.
